MUSIC IN THE WOODS

May 14, 2011, 10 AM – 4 PM

Upon arrival, one can hear Music in the Woods before taking two steps from the car. In fact, the lyrics from a popular hit song in a well-known Rodgers and Hammerstein musical immediately pop to mind — slightly altered, of course. “The woods come alive with the sound of music...” The exciting sounds of dulcimers, mandolins, harmonicas, banjos and guitars are enough to set the leaves on the trees a-quiver and would even inspire Apollo, the Greek God of Music, to do a jig or two.

Musicians of every caliber come to share their renditions of many of our favorite tunes. You can join them. It's not too late to call the Nature Center and sign-up for a spot.

Many of our favorite bands and performers will be returning, including the Back Porch Players, Looney Tunes, Painted Trillium, High Strung, the ORNC Band, the ORNC Dulcimer Gathering, Christopher James, Laurie Ballentine, the Witt Family, and Charm City Rapper Dance, a traditional English Dance troupe with a maypole.

Soap-maker Barbara Stratton, a new vendor this year, will join returnees Bryan Burns with his handcrafted flutes, the Master Gardeners of Baltimore County who will sell plants, and Beaumont Pottery.

Music in the Woods has become one of our most favored events. It's a melodious gathering of families, friends, lovers, and music enthusiasts of all ages. It's a time to lay back, sing along, tap your toes, meet new people, and snack on hotdogs and soda.

If you have your own instrument, bring it along and join a jam session. And if the spirit moves you to break into song or do-si-do with your partner, don't be shy. That's what it is all about at...

ORNC COUNCIL SPEAKER SERIES

THE DEER DILEMMA

By Robert W. Stanhope, Naturalist
April 18 at 7:30 PM

Spring is here and soon your azaleas will bud and pop into...huh oh! Deer alert! Those azaleas are scrumptious entrees for the increasing number of deer browsing yards like yours. Nonetheless, the subject of deer management remains a touchy one. Everyone agrees there's a problem, but not everyone agrees on what to do about it. Naturalist Bob Stanhope is well acquainted with every side of the issue and is empathetic to those holding strong, diverse opinions.

Bob is a member of The Coalition for Responsible Deer Management, a group of concerned citizens who have formed to address the issues created by deer overpopulation in Baltimore County. Their goal is to prompt the Baltimore County Council and the County Executive to take appropriate actions to solve this growing problem. In his presentation, Bob will provide deer facts and explain how overpopulation threatens public safety and health, damages crops and residential/commercial landscaping, hinders forest re-growth, and reduces ecological diversity. He will talk about how the problem evolved and about the most effective management methods.

Bob Stanhope is well known in Maryland for his contributions as Chief Naturalist for Baltimore County. In 1980 he became the first Baltimore County Naturalist/Director for the newly built Oregon Ridge Nature Center. In 1991 he became Chief Naturalist for Oregon Ridge Park, Benjamin Banneker Park, and Cromwell Valley Park. He helped design and develop Marshy Point Nature Center and worked there until his retirement in 2009. Now he has returned to his roots and trail guides at Oregon Ridge when he isn't working on environmental projects.

ELIZA YACHIMOWICZ A RIDGE RUNNER TO REMEMBER

Eliza Yachimowicz is a good sport. In her affable way, she has had to teach many how to pronounce her last name. But once you get to know Eliza, you will not forget her. She has just recently become a Ridge Runner at Oregon Ridge and has quickly and quietly made a place for herself.

Eliza heard about the Ridge Runner program from her mother who read about it in an issue of the Trailblazer. She explains, "I thought it would be something fun to do over the summer, but I like it so much I decided to continue on with it." She especially enjoys feeding Jack the Starling. He must like her too, because he calls to Eliza with his "Jack, Jack" repertoire and amuses her with his continuous array of sounds and words. Jack has competition, however. The Red-Tailed Hawk seems to have the upper perch when it comes to Eliza's affections. Of all the animals, she says she likes caring for "... the hawk by far. He is so quiet and gentle." Sounds like Eliza and the Red-tail have much in common.

Eliza is a good sportswoman, too. Sports are her favorite hobby and pastime, lacrosse being her sport of choice. "I love the speed of the game and what is entailed in handling the stick." Eliza also enjoys some extra-curricular activities after school and just hanging out with her friends.

At home Eliza is responsible for the care of her dog Libby and her fish. When she gets home from school she plays with Libby, feeds her, and bathes her when needed. She also likes to read when she is alone, mostly fiction along the lines of The Twilight Saga by Stephanie Meyer. Eliza studies hard and is a good student with a 3.4 GPA at her middle school. She says her favorite subjects are science and American history. She finds them both "...engaging, interesting, and I'm always excited for those classes to begin. Not to mention I succeed in them."

As for Eliza's plans for the future, sports and science seem to win out over history. She hopes to attend Northwestern University or the University of Maryland to become a sports physiologist or work in the field of sports medicine.

The ORNC staff hopes Eliza will remain a Ridge Runner throughout her high school years. We are happy to have her as part of the team.

THRUSHES WHISTLE WOODLAND TUNES

by Director Courtney Peed

Spring's budding beauty is indeed a feast for the eyes. It is also music to the ears. On your next visit to the park, stand quietly at the edge of the woods or in the meadow, close your eyes, and listen to an ornithological symphony. You may hear the cheery whistling of the American Robin (Turdus migratorius), one of the first songs of spring. If a haunting, flute-like melody reaches your ears, you are among the lucky souls to be soothed by the song of one of our most camouflaged songbirds, the Wood Thrush (Hylocichla mustelina). The songs of a thrush invite you to take a moment on a warm day to sit on one of our log benches and embrace the solitude of the forest. (*Listen at home via the websites at the end of the article)

Like all members of the Thrush family, the Wood Thrush and the Robin, along with their cousins the Eastern Bluebird (Sialia sialis) and the Hermit Thrush (Catharus ustulatus), have strong legs with a "booted tarsus." This means that the scales on the leg are fused instead of spaced apart, which protects the leg as the thrush scratches for the dozens of insects eaten daily.

Robins are known for being "early birds," perhaps because of their worm-catching ability. Robins rely on sight to find worms in the ground, not sound as once thought. They often wait for gardeners to turn over soil so that they can see grubs and worms more easily. Baby robins can eat up to fourteen feet of worms a day, which can lead to fierce and rowdy competition over these tasty invertebrates. It is lucky for the Robin that settlers brought earthworms with them to the New World, since worms had been eliminated in North America during the last ice age.

Robins received their Latin name migratorius from the fact that thrushes are by nature neo-tropical migrants. Though robins might have been migratory in the past, most of them now stay here in winter and eat fruits and berries. Wood Thrushes, however, are still migratory and travel to South American rainforests each winter to gobble down insects and stay warm. They return to the Eastern deciduous forest in spring for the same reasons, but they also nest and rear young in the understory, close to the ground to make foraging easier. This nesting behavior has made the Wood Thrush an object of conservation interest. Their populations have declined by 43% overall since 1966 due mainly to habitat destruction here and in South America. The large deer population has cleared the Wood Thrush's habitat in Oregon Ridge's forest. Deer browse the understory constantly, making re-growth impossible and leaving no shrubs for nesting. While the Wood Thrush song remains a constant along our trails for now, the day may come when their song is heard no more during a walk through our woods.

This spring we hope you enjoy hiking along our trails to listen for the poignant melody of the Wood Thrush, or explore the meadow to hear the joyful song of the American Robin. Perhaps you will agree with poet George Meredith that a thrush sings "of the young time with life ahead." Happy hiking and listening!

THE CHESAPEAKE — Past, Present, and the Keys to a Sustainable Future

By Ned Tillman, Author
May 16 at 7:30 PM

Take a minute and think about the Chesapeake Bay. Did you grimace just a little? If you did, you probably experienced that tiny pang of guilt that passes through many of us when we allow ourselves to acknowledge that we could be doing more to protect this valuable estuary and surrounding watershed.

Ned Tillman's book The Chesapeake Watershed: A Sense of Place and a Call to Action is the 2010 winner of the Best Book on Environmental and Natural Resources and the Excellence in Journalism Award*. During his presentation, Ned will share anecdotes about growing up in Maryland's watershed area, talk about what he has learned during his career working in the environmental industry, and offer achievable ideas on how individuals can help to protect this threatened treasure.

Ned Tillman received a BA from Franklin and Marshall College and a MS from Syracuse University in earth and environmental sciences. He is the Chair of the Howard County Sustainability Board, past chair of the Howard County Conservancy, and a Sustainability Advisor to local businesses, colleges, and non-profit organizations. His firm, Growth Adventures, LLC, helps these organizations assess opportunities and develop plans for embedding good sustainability practices into everything they do.

Ned Tillman knows that all paths lead to the Chesapeake Bay in Maryland. Speaking from his own experience as an active sportsman and environmentalist, Ned says, "We only care for the places we love." His goal is to encourage you and other individuals to get outside and find the path that leads to the places you love.

PANCAKE BREAKFAST 2011 TOPS THE CHARTS

Flip them and they will come! More than 5000 pancakes were flipped to feed 1560 people at Oregon Ridge Nature Center's Pancake Breakfast, a record thus far. It was also our most profitable, $8500 less a few outstanding expenses. Plus, our membership "Get-A-Free-Breakfast" drive attracted 40 new members. Over 100 dedicated volunteers put on the breakfast this year and they accomplished it with only one "almost" glitch — attendance was so high on Saturday that we were sure we would run out of sausage on Sunday, but we did not. Thank you volunteers and thank you to those who came to our breakfast to enjoy the pancakes and sausage, music, raffles, and camaraderie.

Aside from the breakfast, the box raffles topped the fund raising attractions. The box raffles included free passes donated by Hunt Valley Motor Coach (a trip to Atlantic City), Boordy Vineyards' Wine and Herb Festival, Ladew Topiary Gardens, Pennsylvania Railroad Museum, Fire Museum of Maryland, and Earth Treks. Brick Bodies, the Oregon Ridge Beach, and Merritt Athletic Club donated free memberships. Additionally there was a Basket of Cheer, REI Camp Mini Kitchen, an oil change from Brooks Huff, gift card packages from Wegmans and Greetings and Readings, a foursome outing at Turf Valley Golf Club, McCormick Spices with Rack, and a Greene Turtle Happy Hour Party with T-Shirt. We appreciate the continued support of these local businesses.

The smooth execution of this event might indicate that it comes easily. Nothing could be less true. The planning committee, many of who have been doing this for 10 or more years, work hard to prepare. Jeanne Cole lines up the volunteers, Cas Warfield orders food and supplies, Ginna Naylor orders sausage and provides the Basket of Cheer, and Bill LaBarre orchestrates the pancake flipping crew and is our committee chair, aided ably by Jeanne Cole and Jim Curtis. Noot Canoles runs the gift shop and Anne Canoles is the financial officer for the event. Dave Powers handles publicity, Polly Roberts orders flowers, John Canoles organizes the box raffles, and Walter Massey hosts as Master of Ceremonies.

Many others work in a myriad of jobs: grilling sausage (some of our bravest souls); clearing tables; mixing batter; pouring juice; selling syrup, candy and flowers; painting faces; taking admission; greeting diners; manning the membership table; and selling raffle tickets. This year the Oregon Ridge Band and the Oregon

Ridge Dulcimer Gathering supplied the music, enhancing the warm, festive atmosphere that is always a staple at our breakfasts.

It's not too early to mark your calendars for next year's Pancake Breakfast — March 3 and 4, 2012. We hope all of our outstanding volunteers will return to insure that your time with us is as filling, fun and festive as it was in 2011.
